the place was in flames from a burst kerosene lamp that lay in a corner, and Mrs. Seaman was standing there with a light chain wound round her wrists. Her two children were with her.

After the fire had been extinguished she said burglars had gagged her, chained her hands, threatened to kill her, threw the lamp at her, took her money and decamped. The police believe that Mrs. Seaman is suffering from delusions. A month or two ago her husband was killed. To the shock of that event is attributed her present mental condition.
